

Playing a Murder Mystery Game

If you have never played a Freeform Games murder mystery before, some concepts in the game materials may be unfamiliar to you. Our murder mystery games are different from others – so you may want to review these guidelines before you start.

Our murder mystery games are completely interactive. You decide who to interact with and when. You also decide what you tell them and whether you tell them the truth or not. Of course, the same goes for everyone else playing the game...

Participating in a Freeform Games murder mystery involves pretending to be someone else (your character) in a fictional setting. You will meet and interact with other characters and everyone will be trying to achieve their own goals. We don't provide a script – the direction you take your character is entirely up to you.

Here are some tips to help you enjoy the game:

Three basic requirements: Playing a murder mystery game requires just three basic attributes – a sense of fun, an ability to strike up a conversation with another person, and the willingness to pretend to be someone else for an evening. If these abilities are within your comfort zone, you should have no trouble!

Dress the part: You will receive information about your character beforehand. A good costume can help you get into the spirit of the game and sets the stage for plenty of great photographs.

Read your character pack: Your character pack explains who you are, who you know, and what your objectives are. Your character pack also describes what your character believes, not necessarily the actual truth! Keep your character pack handy, as you will need to refer to it throughout the evening.

Goals: Your goals describe the objectives your character is trying to achieve during the game. You should attempt every goal, although it is unlikely you will achieve them all (since other characters may be trying to oppose you).

Introduce yourself: Once the game starts, you will need to talk to other players while pretending to be your character. The easiest way is to introduce yourself to someone as your character. If you don't know anything about them, you can ask who they are and why they are here. If you already know something about the other character (you may have information in your character pack or someone else has already told you something about them), you can ask them about that.

Missing characters: Our games are designed to accommodate various group sizes. If a character described in your pack is not present, they are likely to be non-essential and you should disregard any references to them. This will not drastically affect your goals or the outcome of the game.

Tips for beginners: Your character pack contains tips for people who haven't played our games before. The tips are optional, but they may help you get started.

Find your friends and enemies: In each game, there are those who will help you and those who will oppose you. It's important to find both – although asking your friends for help may require you to help them in return.

Ability cards: You will have special ability cards that you can use to help achieve your goals. The cards are self-explanatory and generally have a limited number of uses. You may need to think carefully about who you want to use them on.

The Host: Ideally, you shouldn't need the Host to achieve your goals – talking and negotiating with the other characters is usually enough. You should consult the Host if you have a question about the rules, but you certainly shouldn't ask for help in accomplishing your goals, as that is up to you!

Act the part: Don't start talking about football or current affairs or anything else that isn't part of the game. It's more fun if everyone tries to maintain the illusion that the party is genuine.

Read your character pack yet again: If you find yourself at a loose end, find some space and re-read your character pack. You may find there's someone you haven't spoken to yet or something you still need to do.

The murder: Who carried out the murder? Finding out is a matter of talking to people and following the clues.

Finally: Remember, the most important thing is to have a good time!
